Maximum tuition fee periods: Masters and Doctoral degrees

Tuition fees for postgraduate studies are levied per qualification per year, with the exception of the MBA, MTh and the Postgraduate Diploma in Management, which is levied per registered module.

The maximum tuition fee periods, on which tuition fees payable are calculated, is two years for a master's degree and three years for a doctoral degree according to the new model put in place from 2011. Again, these financial tuition fee periods should not be confused with any of the General Academic Rules!

When a masters or doctoral student does not adhere to the General Academic Rules regarding the submission date of their (mini)dissertations or theses, such students run the risk that their examination results will be received late and will therefore not be updated on the graduation lists. The result will be registration for an additional academic year and the possible exceeding of the tuition fee period. The implication of exceeding this tuition fee period is that masters or doctoral students will pay registration fees and, the full annual qualification programme cost in each year exceeding the limit.

All pipeline masters and doctoral students from whom class fees have been levied according to the previous model will stay on that model until completion of their current masters or doctoral degree. If and when these pipeline students exceed their three years for a Master's student or four years for a Doctoral student, class fees shall be levied according to the new model.
